Mosaic is an old art that is made from small pieces of different materials. This art has been widely used in different cultures and history and is still used in modern times.

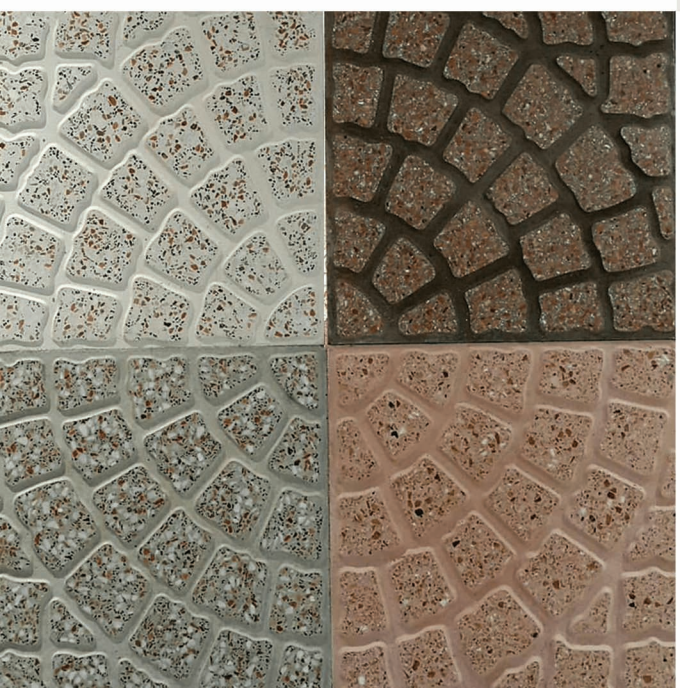

In mosaic production, experts assemble the pieces through the design and planning stage. Then, the pieces are cut and shaped and glued to the main mosaic sheet using adhesive paper. Finally, professionals can complete the mosaic in a unique way by using more components such as fog plus, turret or puke.

According to its characteristics, mosaic can be used in many sectors. Among the uses, we can mention works of art, tiles, tables and wall panels. Also, mosaic is used in many public and commercial spaces, such as in palaces, schools, parks and tracks.

One of the distinctive features of polymer mosaic is its resistance to moisture and other weather conditions. This type of mosaic is highly resistant to water, humidity and salt, and it is also resistant to scratches, discoloration and staining. This feature makes polymer mosaics useful in shopping areas, gardens, swimming pools, bathrooms, kitchens and other areas with high humidity.

In addition to moisture resistance, polymer mosaics also have rust resistance. This feature is related to the production method of polymer mosaic based on polymer materials, which are resistant to oxidation factors. In addition, polymer mosaic has the ability to resist scratches and has strong and durable features.
